16. (Original) The method of Claim 15, further comprising:

rendering the second portion of the text selection in the determined text reading order for the second portion of the text such that the rendered text selection contains the first portion of the text selection rendered according to the determined reading order for the first portion and the second portion of the text selection rendered according to the determined reading order for the second portion.

17. (Previously Presented) The method of Claim 16, wherein rendering the text selection includes rendering the text selection containing both the first portion and the second portion according to the returned text display alignment.

18. (Previously Presented) The method of Claim 17, wherein the text alignment is left alignment.

19. (Previously Presented) The method of Claim 17, wherein the text alignment is right alignment.

20.-21. (Canceled)

22. (Currently Amended) A method of rendering text and data in a multi-lingual environment, the method comprising:

receiving a text selection containing text portions entered according to a plurality of spoken languages;

rendering the first portion of the text selection in the determined text reading order; and rendering the determined text display alignment according to the first spoken language.

2. The following is an examiner's statement of reasons for allowance: The recitation of the line property identifying the language being used to determine the text order, in combination with the other claimed determinations and alignment setting overcomes the prior art. Specifically, the Davis reference determines reading order on whole at the paragraph level, and only runs the algorithm after word wrapping has defined the various lines. It only renders the lines after the reading level for each “run” (string of same-reading-order character) is determined. Because the breakup into lines is done afterwards, Davis would be incompatible with a property at the line level that determines the language.

Any comments considered necessary by applicant must be submitted no later than the payment of the issue fee and, to avoid processing delays, should preferably accompany the issue fee. Such submissions should be clearly labeled “Comments on Statement of Reasons for Allowance.”
